TUESDAY OCTOBER 16, 1900
RUSSIA IN CHINA

The powers seem to be more in accord about China than they have been respecting the course to be pursued in the future to bring the empire better within the influence of a more civilized mode of conducting its business with those who belong to other civilizations and other races. The late note from the United States to France is acceptable to Germany in letter and spirit, which will aid in reconciling differences about the manner of closing the late rebellion among the Chinese. The Chinese have taken many valuable lives of citizens and subjects of Christian governments, and much has been said about punishment and indemnity for the loss of their lives, but it remains to be ascertained whether Christianity will not be overmatched by the cunning Celestial.
Russia continues to invade Manchuria to make its territory more subject to Russian influence, which is not assuming to other powers regarding that country. It appears very much from the course of the Bear that Manchuria will not continue to be a part of the Chinese empire in the future, and if not a part of China it will become a part of Russia's Asiatic possessions, which may be the means of presenting to the powers a problem for solution which will include the right of other nations to interfere in a matter that should remain to be settled between Russia and China. There is not anything at this time that would lead to a belief that Europe is anxious to go to war with the old empire, or that it is in a mood to defend the integrity of its territory against the encroachments of a Christian power.
The only serious feature that Russia's appropriation of Manchuria would likely present to the powers is the future effect extension of territory in Asia would have to increase the power of that nation in the east. The future power of Russia in Asia is a problem which is causing some trouble to the more commercial among the nations. Commerce is more a power to England, and in the near future will be, if it is not so now, to Germany, than the extent of European territory occupied by those nations. In their commerce in the future, as they are situated, will continue to be largely their strength.
The appropriation by Russia of contiguous territory acts in a double sense to increase its power. Russia, by not going out over the earth appropriating territory, is securing a more centralized force in government than it could secure from any extension of territory made by appropriation of territory in different parts of the earth separated by oceans.
Continuity of territory appears to be its object which will make its empire more servicable and for that reason it will possess more strength than an empire made up of disconnected parts of the earth's surface. It will have under its direct control the trade of its empire and will be in a position to exclude other powers from its territory to a better advantage than it could have were it an empire made up of widely separated parts of the earth. The growing power and material development of Russia demands attention from the lesser nations, or it will in the near future be in a position to command their attention, which command is more particularly feared by them than anything there is now present.
It is the chief cause of jealousy over the encroachments of that power upon Chinese territory but Russia who has possession of Manchuria is in a position to reply to objections made to its occupation and its final appropriation by showing the powers what they are going to do about it. The United States could learn much from the Bear that might be useful to it as a nation by remaining at home gathering strength which it will require in the near future to protect the American continents against European appropriation. The lesser States of South America will demand protection which the United States may not be in a position to give when it has abandoned the Monroe Doctrine, which the present administration seems to be anxious to do as a part of its commercial or imperial policy as made plain in the Nicaragua canal treaty.
The United States is in a very undesirable position which has developed from conditions made by the administration at the close of the Spanish war. Its imperial commercialism has caused McKinley to change the former policy of the country from a strong position which nothing valuable in the form of a policy for the future has been gained. The policy of imperialism is a part of the weakness that has fallen upon the country which has arisen out of a weak administration as a substitute for the Monroe doctrine which appears must be abandoned because it is American and is necessary, for that cause, in opposition to the policy of imperialism.

MINES AND MINING

News of Nevada's Leading Industry Clipped From Exchanges.

Arrangements are about completed for consolidating the Dexter and Tuscarora mines at Tuscarora next month. James McOatcheon, a resident of Wadsworth for about two years, was the original locator of the California mine on the Comstock, a property that turned out a few hundred million dollars. Mr. McOatcheon was in at the birth of the lode—Wadsworth Dispatch.

The Roscoe-Homestead Mining Co. has been shipping for some time an average of 75 tons a week of lead ore from its mine at Hamilton to the Colorado smelter. More ore has been shipped from old White Pine during the past summer than from any other county in the State, with the single exception of Esmeralda—Watts Pine News.

Litigation Over The Smelter.

Proceedings were had yesterday in the District Court in the matter of the attachment and mechanic's lien placed upon the property of the Reno Smelting and Milling Company by the Bank of Nevada and George Holmesworth. The board of directors moved that judgment be confessed. Oscar J. Smith moved to intervene on behalf of the stockholders. The matter was taken under advisement.
Dr. Pierpont Edwards is now holder of the Hillhouse and Cooley interests in the company, which with his own stock, gives him a controlling interest.
The reorganization plan is taking definite shape and it looks at present as though a way would be had out of this difficulty and the smelter be run on a business basis.

A courier arrived last night from Hell Hater bearing tidings from Mingo, Wright, Sonseay, and what the other fellow's name. These valiant warriors are hunting bear in the high Sierras. Up to the time the courier left they had better luck in hunting than in finding. They have plenty of ammunition, but they will probably be driven out of the hills in a day or two on account of a shortage in liquid provisions.

Right of Way not Arranged.

I. N. Pattison, of the Southern Pacific company came up to Reno yesterday and made a proposition to Miss Mary Wall to settle her charges for a right of way for the cut off through her lands.
Miss Wall accepted Mr. Pattison's terms at the advice of Benjamin Currier, one of her attorneys, but A. E. Cheney, another of her counselors, advised her to continue litigation.
It is a great pity that a settlement could not have been had, for the company is ready to start work shortening its line across the Truckee meadows. This would mean a big payroll expended in Reno for several months and would also hasten the building of the shops in Reno, which Mr. Pattison states will probably take place as soon as the cut-off is finished.
